Notes for James Nell Hicks:

Sir Ellis Hicks was made a knight bannerette by Edward, the Black Prince (son of King Edward III) September 9, 1356, for capturing a French standard at the battle of Poitiers in the 100 Years War. The descendants of Sir Ellis Hicks are; Robert Hicks > John Hicks > Baptist Hicks > James Hicks > Robert Hicks.

Robert Hicks, born 1583 in Southwark, London, England, arrived at Plymouth Colony on the "Fortune", which was the first ship to arrive after the "Mayflower", on November 11, 1621. Robert was from Bermondsey Street in Southwark, New London, England. Robert was one of the fifty-eight original Purchasers of Plymouth Colony. He was a fellmonger and a leather dresser while living in England. He was a man of education and active in the affairs of the colony until his death 24 March 1647. Robert married Margaret (Winslow) Hicks, who arrived in Plymouth Colony two years later (1623) on the Anne, with their three children, son Samuel, age 11, and daughters Lydia and Phoebe. A fourth child, Ephraim, was born in Plymouth in 1624. Robert Hicks died at Plymouth, MA 24 March 1647. There is little or no information on the relationship of James Nell to Robert Hicks, but the naming conventions of the descendants of James Nell would indicate a relationship.

Notes for James Brookshire:

Dorchester County is a county located in the U.S. state of Maryland on its Eastern Shore. It is bordered by the Choptank River to the northeast, Talbot County to the northwest, Caroline County to the northeast, Wicomico County to the southeast, Sussex County, Delaware to the east, and the Chesapeake Bay to the west. Dorchester County uses the slogan, "The Heart of Chesapeake Country," due to its geographical location and the heart-like shape of the county on a map. Settlers from England began to claim lands in the mid 1600's under land grants from Lord Baltimore and by 1669 Dorchester County was recognized as a County. It was named for the Earl of Dorset, a family friend of the Calverts (the founding family of the Maryland colony). Its county seat is Cambridge.

Notes for William Wallace:

In 1616-1618, William Wallace stands first in the list of masons at Edinburgh Castle and was paid for making moulds for plasteres and carving window-boards in additions to a cartouche over a doorway that is noted as an accomplished specimen of Netherlands strapwork dated 1615 and stamped with Wallace's mark. It is not assumed that William Wallace was necessarily the chief agent in the change in style which is seen in so many Scottish buildings after 1615, but he is certainly the representative figure, and the style issues from the official quarter where he was the senior artificer. The reconstruction of Linlithgow Palace (dated 1619 and 1620) is also credited to William Wallace. Although, Wallace's most famous and significant building was begun eight years later. Heriot's Hospital at Edinburgh was founded under the will of George Heriot for the education of fatherless boys. He began it in 1628, but died before its completion in 1631. William Wallace died in 1631, but his style long survived him. Already in his lifetime it was caricatured at Caerlaverock (1620) and well imitated in 1628 at Moray House, Edinburgh, the town-house of a Countess of Home.

Helen Roodman and William Wallace had the following child:

- 329. i. Janet Wallace was born in 1608 in Elderslie, Renfrewshire, Scotland. She died in 1637 in Argyll, Scotland. She married Robert Wallace in 1628 in Elderslie, Renfrewshire, Scotland. He was born in 1600 in Holmston, Ayrshire, Scotland. He died in Oct 1681 in St Quivox, Ayrshire, Scotland.

Notes for William Wallace:

Wallace of Elderslie (1) The name 'Wallace' (probably derived from Galleius, with many variations such as Walleis) is believed to imply that this family originated in either Wales or (perhaps more likely) the Cymbric (Cimbric) kingdom of Strathclyde which at one time covered much of the middle-western half of Great Britain. It is thought likely that the family was one of the many that made a mark in Scotland in King David's 'administrative revolution' in the second quarter of the 12th century. However, it is not clear how long the family had been in Scotland by that time - it may have come to Scotland shortly before or even during King David's reign (1124-1153). (2) Much interest has been focused on this family because of its most famous son, Sir William Wallace, who was Guardian of Scotland during a key part of 'The Wars of Independence'. However, rather than help clarify the genealogy of the family, that interest has managed to obscure it because so many contradictory descents have been produced. To date no 'definitive' pedigree has yet been found.

Janet Hamilton and William Wallace had the following children:

1316. i. William Wallace was born in 1555 in Elderslie, Renfrewshire, Scotland. He died on 06 Apr 1611 in Elderslie, Renfrewshire, Scotland. He married Katherine Crawford in 1579 in Elderslie, Renfrewshire, Scotland. She was born in 1555 in Renfrewshire, Scotland. She died on 06 Apr 1611 in Elderslie, Renfrewshire, Scotland.
 - ii. James Wallace was born in 1555 in Elderslie, Renfrewshire, Scotland. He died in 1603 in Muirhead, Hunterdon, NJ.
 - iii. John Wallace was born in 1570 in Elderslie, Renfrewshire, Scotland. He died in Dec 1651 in Renfrew, Renfrewshire, Scotland.
2634. Hugh Crawford, son of Lawrence Crawford and Helen Campbell, was born in 1521 in Kilbirnie, Ayrshire, Scotland. He died in 1576 in Kilbirnie, Ayrshire, Scotland. He married Margaret Colquhoun in 1550 in Kilbirnie, Ayrshire, Scotland.
2635. Margaret Colquhoun was born in 1530 in Kilbirnie, Ayrshire, Scotland. She died in 1561 in Kilbirnie, Ayrshire, Scotland.

Notes for Hugh Crawford:

Kilbirnie (Gaelic Cille Bhranaidh) is a small town situated in North Ayrshire on the west coast of Scotland. Kilbirnie derived its name from the parish church and the church obtained its name from the saint to whom it was dedicated; the celtic Cil, pronounced Kil, signifying a church, being prefixed to the name of the saint; St Birnie, or Birinus, is said to have been a bishop and confessor who converted the West Saxons. In the early years of Mary Queen of Scot's reign, foreign invasions were a constant threat. The English wanted more than soothing diplomacy from the Queen Mother - Mary of Guise - they wanted custody of little Mary herself, in order to marry her to their child-king Edward VI. The result was another in the series of invasions known to later history as 'the Rough Wooing' and the catastrophic Scots defeat at the battle of Pinkiecleuch, on 10 September 1547. William Patten, a Londoner (as he proudly styles himself on the title page of his work), came to Scotland with the invasion force and saw for himself the dreadful carnage left in the wake of the successful English assault. To the Scottish Catholic church, the English invaders were heretics, and a good turn-out of church men and their vassals was a feature of the Scottish side. Alas, the Kirk militant had little success. The battle was a disaster, with casualties greater than at Flodden. Mary had to be spirited to safety at the island priory of Inchmahome whilst arrangements were made to evacuate her to France. Soon after this notable strewing of their footmen's weapons, began a pitiful sight of the dead corpses lying dispersed abroad, some their legs off, some but houghed, and left lying half-dead, some thrust quite through the body, others the arms cut off, diverse their necks half a sunder, many their heads cloven, of sundry the brains pasht out, some others again their heads quite off, with other many kinds of killing. After that and further in chase, all for the most part killed either in the head or in the neck, for our horsemen could not well reach the lower with their swords. And thus with blood and slaughter of the enemy, this chase was continued five miles in length westward from the place of their standing, which was in the fallow fields of Inveresk until Edinburgh Park and well nigh to the gates of the town itself and unto Leith, and in breadth nigh 4 miles, from the Firth sands up toward Dalkeith southward. In all which space, the dead bodies lay as thick as a man may note cattle grazing in a full replenished pasture. The river ran all red with blood, so that in the same chase were counted, as well by some of our men that somewhat diligently did mark it as by some of them taken prisoners, that very much did lament it, to have been slain above 14 thousand. In all this compass of ground what with weapons, arms, hands, legs, heads, blood and dead bodies, their flight might have been easily tracked to every of their three refuges. And for the smallness of our number and shortness of the time (which was scant five hours, from one to well nigh six) the mortality was so great, as it was thought, the like aforetime not to have been seen. Indeed it was the better maintained with their own swords that lay each where scattered by the way, whereof our men, as they had broke one still took up another; there was store enough, and they laid it on freely, that right many among them at this business broke three or four ere they returned homeward to the army. I may well perchance confess, that herein we used some sharpness (although not as much as we might) and little courtesy, and yet I can safely avow, all done by us, as rather by sundry respects driven and compelled, then either of cruelty or delight in slaughter. And like someway to the diligent master that sharply sometime (when warning will not serve) doth beat his scholar, not hardly for hate of child, or his own delight in beating, but for love he would have him amend his faults or negligence and beats him once surely because he would need to beat him no more. One cause of the correction we used, I may well count to be their tyrannous vow they made (which we certainly heard of) that whensoever they fought and overcame, they would slay so many, and spare so few, a sure proof of whereof they plainly had showed at our onset before, where they killed all, and saved not a man. Another respect was to revenge their great and cruel tyranny shown at Panyarhough [the battle of Ancrum Moor, 1545 - a Scottish victory] where they slew the Lord Evers [Sir Ralph Eure] and cruelly killed as many else of our men as came in their hands . . . Another thing and not the meanest matter was that their armour amongst them so little differed, and their apparel so base and beggarly, wherein the Lurdein [rascal] was in a manner all one with the Lord, and the loun [commoner] with the laird: all clad alike in jacks covered with white leather, doublets of the same or of fustian and most commonly all white hose. Not one with either chain, brooch, ring or garment of silk that I could see, unless chains of latten drawn four or five times along the thighs of their hose and doublet sleeves for cutting; and of that sort I saw many. This vileness of port [appearance], was the cause that so many of their great men and gentlemen were killed and so few saved. The outward show, the semblance and sign whereby a stranger might discern a villein from a gentleman was not among them to be seen. As for words and goodly proffer of great ransoms, [they] were as common and rife in the mouths of the one as of the other. And therefore hereby it came to pass that after, at the examination and counting of the prisoners we found taken about above twenty of their villeins to one of their gentlemen: whom no man need to doubt, we had rather have spared, then the villeins, if we could have known any difference between them in taking. And yet notwithstanding all these our just causes and quarrels to kill them, we showed more grace and took more to mercy then the case on our side, for the cause aforesaid did well deserve or require . . . for the prisoners accounted by the Marshal's book were numbered to above 1500. Touching the slaughter, sure we killed nothing so many as (if we had minded cruelty so much) for the time and opportunity right well we might, for my Lord's grace, of his wonted mercy, much moved with the pity of this sight, and rather glad of victory, than desirous of cruelty, soon after (by guess) five of the clock stayed his standard of his horsemen at the furthest part of their camp westward and caused the trumpets to blow a retreat. Whereat Sir Ralph Sadler treasurer (whose great diligence at the time and ready forwardness in the chiefest of the fray before did worthily merit no small commendation) caused all the footmen to stay and then with much travail and great pain, made them to be brought into some order again. It was a thing yet not easily to be done, by reason they all as then somewhat busily applied their market to the spoil of the Scottish camp, wherein were found good provision of white bread, ale, oatcakes, oatmeal, mutton, butter in pots, cheese and in diverse tents good wine also; good store to say truth, of good victual for the manner of the country. And in some tents among them (as I heard say) were also found of silver plate a dish or two, 2 or 3 goblets and 3 or 4 chalices, the which the finders (I know not with what reverence but with some devotion hardly) plucked out of the cold clouts and thrust into their warm bosoms... It was a wonder to see, but that (as they say) many hands make light work, how soon the dead bodies were stripped out of their garments stark naked, even from as far as the chase went until the place of our onset; whereby the personages of our enemies might by the way easily be viewed and considered; the which for tallness of stature, cleanness of skin, bigness of bone with due proportion of all parts, I for my part advisedly noted to be such, as but that I saw that it was so, I would not have believed sure so many of that sort to have been in all their country. Among them lay there many priests and kirkmen, as they call them, of whom it was bruited amongst us, that there was a whole band of 3 or 4 thousand, but we were after informed, it was not altogether so... Among these [the Scots] weapons and beside several other banners, standards and pennons, a banner of white sarcenet was found under which it was said these kirkmen came, whereupon was painted a woman with her hair about her shoulders, kneeling before a crucifix, and on her right hand a church; after that written a long upon a banner in great roman letters afflictæ sponsæ ne obliviscaris [Do not forget your afflicted spouse]; which words declared that they would have this woman to signify the church, Christ's spouse and thus in humble wise making her petition unto Christ her husband that he would not now forget her, his spouse, being scourged and persecuted, meaning at this time by us. It was said it was the Abbot of Dunfermline's banner; but whether it was his or the Bishop of Dunkeld's, the governor's brothers [brothers of the Regent Arran] (who I understand were both in the field) and what the number of kirkmen was, I could not certainly learn: but I was sure it was some devout papist's device, that not only he like would not endeavor to do ought for atonement and peacemaking between us, but all contrariwise brought forth his standard stoutly to fight in field himself against us; pretexting this his great ungodliness thus bent toward the maintenance of a naughty quarrel with colour of religion to come in aid of Christ's church. Which church to say truth, coming thus to battle full appointed with weapon and guarded with such sort of deacons to fight; however in painting he had set her out, a man might well think in that condition he had rather framed a cursed quean [hussy] that would pluck her husband by the pate except she had her will, than like a meek spouse that went about humbly by submission and prayer to desire her husband's help for redress of things amiss. Notes for Sir George Ayr Campbell:

"The Campbells they are a' in arms,

Their loyal faith and truth to show,

With banners rattling in the wind,

The Campbells are coming Ho-Ro, Ho-Ro!"

--from "The Campbells Are Coming" a traditional pipe tune

This ancient Scottish name has its origins in a Gaelic nickname "Caimbeul", meaning "wry (or crooked) mouth", from "dam", bent or crooked, and "beul", mouth. That it was originally a nickname can be seen by a charter of 1447, which records Duncan le Cambeli, the first Lord Campbell, the "le" being the Scottish "lie", meaning "so called", or "known as". A sizeable group of early European surnames were gradually created from the habitual use of nicknames. These were given in the first instance with reference to occupation, or to a variety of characteristics, such as physical attributes or peculiarities, mental and moral characteristics, supposed resemblance to an animal's or bird's appearance or disposition, or to habits of dress. Clan tradition has it, that the Campbells were originally known as "Clana Duibhne" or "O'Duine", from one Diarmid O'Duine of Lochow. About 1390, Duncan Campbell witnessed a charter by Duncan, Earl of Levenax, and is believed to be the first namebearer to introduce a "p" into the name, influenced by the erroneous theory that "Cam(p)bell" comes from the Norman-French "de Campobello" i.e., "of the beautiful plain". Campbell is the family name of the hereditary Dukes of Argyll, dating from 1445, and their Coat of Arms is described thus: "Quarterly, first and fourth, gyronny of eight gold and black, the Crest being a boar's head coupéd gold". The first recorded spelling of the family name is shown to be that of Gillespic Cambel, which was dated 1263, in the "Exchequer Rolls of Scotland", during the reign of King Alexander 111 of Scotland, 1249 - 1286. Surnames became necessary when governments introduced personal taxation. In England this was known as Poll Tax. Throughout the centuries, surnames in every country have continued to "develop" often leading to astonishing variants of the original spelling.

Colin Campbell, 6th Laird of Glenorchy and son of Sir George Campbell, was called Grey Colin for the color of his hair and beard. He expanded the power of his branch of Clan Campbell eastward through the Glens of Breadalbane and up against the lands of the Stewart Earls of Atholl in Perthshire. What better way to consolidate and secure his eastern borders than to arrange the marriage of his son 'Black' Duncan Campbell with Janet Stewart, daughter of the 4th Earl of Atholl?

In 16th Century Scotland, an earl was roughly two or three ranks above a laird and much more politically powerful because earls sat in Parliament. The marriage of Duncan and Janet was a smart move for the Breadalbane Campbells and shows their growing strength.

Colin's alliances and connections in all directions increased the Breadalbane Campbells' wealth and influence. Since he did not like to travel, Grey Colin sent his son Black Duncan as emissary to Edinburgh where Duncan became good friends with James VI, the first Protestant king of Scotland.

During the 6th Laird's lifetime, in the mid to late 1500's, many Clan Campbell members joined the Reformation and converted to Protestantism. The clan chief, Lord Archibald Campbell, 4th Earl of Argyll, became a Presbyterian before he died in 1558. His son, the 5th Earl of Argyll and Colin's superior kinsman, was a devout Protestant who played an important role in the events involving Mary Queen of Scots. Colin's father-in-law William, Lord Ruthven, was an early Protestant supporter before he died in 1552.

Along with the majority of Scots, especially the Lowlanders and the townspeople, Colin and his other subordinate clansmen became followers of John Knox, the founder of Presbyterianism. Some clans (Erskines, Camerons, Oliphants) who had close contacts with the English joined the Church of England.

A significant number of the old Highland clans were more conservative and stayed Roman Catholic for some time (MacDonalds, MacLeans, MacGregors, Gordons). This set the Campbells at odds with several neighboring clans. Many Campbells were killed supporting their new faith and defending their holdings against raiding Catholic clans. There were atrocities and bad feelings on both sides for the next two centuries. Catholic neighbors even accused some Campbells of witchcraft.

The Campbells generally supported the Protestant Stewart kings while Scottish Highlander Catholics supported the exiled Stuarts (Jacobites) who were based in France and encouraged by Rome. But there were times in the early 1700's when some Campbells joined the Jacobites after the English picked George I, a "wee German lairdie" (little German squire), to be the King of Great Britain.

Many Campbells did well under the British kings after England and Scotland were united. Several became members of the Scottish branch of the British nobility. The Earls of Argyll moved up to become Dukes, the top ranking nobility, while Colin's descendants eventually became the Earls and then Marquesses of Breadalbane.

For the past 400 years, the British Army has recruited heavily from Clan Campbell and its associated families. At least 16 different Campbell-based Highlander regiments have moved up into the line of battle with their bagpipers playing "The Campbells Are Coming."
